Street-check exception now upsetting all sides

Both police union, criminal-defence lawyers slam policy

Dylan C. Robertson For Metro | Ottawa

Looming provincial regulations on police street checks are drawing criticism from both frontline Ottawa officers and criminal-defence lawyers.

As of Jan. 1, police will no longer be able to approach people who aren't criminal suspects without first stating all conversations are voluntary, and that the person will get a receipt if their information goes into a database.

It replaces a system where police could approach anybody and log their name, location and activities into a database, used to link suspects to gang activity, a system that saw a disproportionate amount of minorities stopped.

The new "regulated interactions" system, which gives people an explicit choice to not speak to police, includes a large exception. "The regulations do not apply if the officer has reasonable or probable grounds that a crime has been committed, or will be committed," said the project's Ottawa lead, Insp. Mark Patterson.

Ottawa's police union says officers will probably now only approach suspects, instead of proactively asking neighbours, because the latter requires the disclaimer opening police to complaints.

Matt Skof, president of the Ottawa Police Association, believes this will further entrench distrust of the police, because officers will only approach people they deem suspicious. "The entire province is going to be negatively impacted," Skof said, by "a very unsafe environment."

Skof added the changes have "emboldened" gang members and people involved in criminal activity.

Defence lawyer Leo Russomanno also criticized the exemption, saying it's too broad. "The police are obviously going to try and pigeonhole whatever they're doing into that exception," he said.

"The government got all this fanfare for so-called 'banning carding' and that's just completely false."

Cheaper Internet coming to community housing

ONLINE ACCESS

Deal will help 32,000 tenants, organization's head says

Ottawa Community Housing has reached a deal with a local internet provider that will provide unlimited Internet for tenants at a cost of $25 per Stéphane Giguère, CEO of Ottawa Community Housing (OCH), said the arrangement has been in development for over a year and will help the organization's 32,000 tenants working with a tight budget.

"For all Internet users, we see rates going up as we speak,"

"For our tenants, the rates are going down. It's very positive for them. People are using the Internet more and more for communication and education, but also for employment — people go on the internet to find a job," he said.

Giguère said that access is also crucial for the more than 6,000 youth living in OCH properties who need to do their homework or communicate with friends. The new package is a partnership with not-forprofit National Capital FreeNet.

The deal, available to OCH tenants starting Jan. 3, offers speeds of up to 6 Mbps and unlimited usage.

It will cost $25 per month for those with a telephone landline, or $30 per month

Community housing believes the package will be important to all their tenants, but especially for children. ISTOCK for those without.

Like most other Internet providers, the company also requires a modem purchase and an installation fee if a land line doesn't already exist.

Giguère said it was important that they reach an agreement for unlimited Internet, instead of caps that result in surcharges or reduced service.

"By having unlimited you're not financially exposed to a surcharge from using the Internet," he said.

"For affordability it's important for it to be predictable. When you are in a situation where your income is limited it could be challenging to have a surprising charge.'

In comparison, Rogers offers a package for $25 a month that includes speeds of up to 5 Mbps and only 25 GB per month. TekSavvy's lowest rate for DSL Internet is 6 Mbps with a 150 GB cap for $30 a month — the cost rises to $40 per month for unlimited data.

Giguère said even a price difference of $5 or $10 makes a big difference.

"Every dollar makes a difference to tenants living in a low-income situation," he said.

Many left out, say activists

Canada's telecom regulator has declared broadband Internet access a basic service across the country, but local activists say that won't help low-income residents in Ottawa facing high

On Wednesday, the CRTC announced it aims to ensure service providers (ISPs) offer Internet services at speeds of at least 50 megabits per second for downloading data, and 10 Mbps for uploads.

ISPs will also be required to offer unlimited data options for fixed broadband services.

However, unlike the recent CRTC decision to cap the cost of basic TV services, the regulator said it won't propose a cap on what ISPs can charge customers for basic broadband Internet.

That decision disappointed advocacy group ACORN, who had hoped the CRTC decision would mean guaranteed lower prices for basic Internet service.

"We're kind of disappointed there's no subsidy program to help low-income people to make the Internet affordable," said Gisele Bouvier, president of the organization's Vanier chapter.

Bouvier said the infrastructure money announcement will improve service for rural residents, but it doesn't help urban Canadians who are struggling to afford basic service.

The CRTC's report to the Minister of Innovation, Science and Economic Development did acknowledge the struggles facing lower-income households, including a EKOS survey that found 36 per cent of respondents are limiting their Internet use due to cost. The report also noted that the government itself asks Canadians to access services online, yet social assistance doesn't factor in the cost of broadband connectivity. HALEY RITCHIE/METRO

New hospital site costs still undecided

Public Services and Procurement Canada says no decision has been made on how to clean up the future site of the Ottawa Civic Hospital or how to pay for those costs.

The government agency that has control over the former Sir John Carling Building is developing estimates for the cost of removing a large amount of concrete left over from when the building was imploded.

Metro reported earlier this week on documents that show groundwater on the site has been found to contain phenol. The issue was enough of a concern that Environment Canada ordered PSPC to ensure it prevented the chemical from leaking off of the site.

The chemical is believed to have been left behind by the explosives used in the implosion.

A PSPC spokesman said the department is considering excavating and removing all of the concrete, but that's not the only option it is exploring.

"Other short, medium and long term remediation [and] risk management options for the site are also being considered," wrote Nicolas Boucher a spokesperson for the department.

He said they would work with the hospital if the excavation becomes necessary.

"Should the excavation option be chosen, PSPC will work with the Ottawa Hospital to determine how best to manage the excavation from a timing perspective and associated costs," he added.

The Sir John Carling Site has been selected as the site, after a lengthy political process.

Wynne wants debate on bottled water

Ontario plans to increase its charge for water-taking permits for bottled water companies in the new year, but Premier Kathleen Wynne says she wants a bigger discussion on the future of the entire industry.

The province charges $3.71 for every million litres of water taken, on top of a permit fee of $750 for low- or medium-risk water takings.

Wynne wants to see that charge increased, but said price won't be the only factor as the Liberal government considers new rules for bottled water companies.

"Absolutely that needs to go up, but the reason that we wanted a bit more time to look at this is, is that enough? Is it enough that the price just goes up?" she asked in a yearend interview with The Canadian Press.

"I really think we need to look at the culture around bottled water. Why are we all drinking water out of bottles when most of us don't need

Wellington Water Watchers, a group of environmentalists in the Guelph, Ont., area an hours' drive west of Toronto, agreed that increasing the price for permits for bottled water companies won't address concerns about water use.

"It's not just about increasing the price," said Water Watchers chair Mike Nagy. "No price would be high enough to stop some companies from doing what they're doing because the profits are so high.'

Wynne imposed a two-year moratorium on permits for new or expanded bottled water operations after Nestle purchased a well that the small but fast-growing township of Centre Wellington wanted for its drinking water supply. THE CANADIAN PRESS

New Year's Eve torch relay set

Event will kick off 2017 celebrations

Haley Ritchie Metro | Ottawa

Ottawa's five-metre high 2017 torch outside city hall is ready for New Year's Eve after being installed this week and test-lit on Wednesday.

The official lighting of the fire "cauldron" will take place on Dec. 31 to celebrate the beginning of Canada's 150th birthday.

The cauldron will be lit in a grand ceremony, according to organizers, beginning with indigenous elders and a firekeeper delivering a sacred fire by torch. That sacred fire will be used to light the cauldron.

Once the sculpture is lit a "Fire of Friendship Torch Relay" involving local youth will take place.

"It will be a spectacular, moving ceremony when we light up the cauldron and then create the almost one kilometre stretch of light and fire with inspiration kids from local schools," said Guy Laflamme, executive director of Ottawa 2017 celebrations.

More than 400 youth, each with a special small torch, will form a human chain from Ottawa city hall to Parliament Hill. They will light their torches one after the other until they get to Olympian Penny Oleksiak, who will wait at the end of Wellington Street.

Oleksiak's torch will then to be used for a ceremony at the Centennial Flame outside of Parliament Hill.

The cauldron, now installed just outside city hall, will remain a "special landmark throughout the year and will be re-lit for special occasions."

The cauldron's burner is the same one used at the Vancouver Olympics in 2010. The torch is fuelled by natural gas from Enbridge. The Canadian Gas Association and Enbridge covered the costs of the building of the cauldron.

Two local high school students, Jonathan Chen from Lisgar Collegiate Institute and Caitlin Gilchrist from Mother Teresa High School, demonstrated the miniature torches on Wednesday during the test lighting.

Senior recounts brutal attack that outraged a city

Zane Woodford Metro | Halifax

An 85-year-old woman says she was "petrified" as she was repeatedly punched in the face and dragged from her home during a brutal assault in Halifax.

Police say they were called to Jeanette MacDonald's home Tuesday night.

MacDonald said she was home alone when there was a knock at the door. She called out to ask who was there, and when there was no answer, she went to the door.

"I opened the door, and the first thing he said was, 'Give me the money.' I said, 'What the hell are you talking about, I'm not giving you no money.' And he hit me with his fist in my face," MacDonald said in an interview Wednesday morning.

MacDonald said the man, who she'd never seen before, told her he had a gun and knife. She continued to refuse his demands for money, and he dragged her outside.

"He said, 'Here's one for ya,' and he let me have it right in the face again," she said.

MacDonald's neighbours rushed to her side when they heard her cries for help.

"I was screaming, I couldn't stand the pain," MacDonald

She said the suspect ran away behind her home.

"Just a punk, that's all he was," MacDonald said.

Paramedics treated MacDonald's injuries at the scene. On Wednesday morning, she had two black eyes, a large bruise on her chest, and her hand was swollen.

"I'm not feeling too bad now, like I was at first, but I'm sore," she said.

Halifax police spokeswoman Const. Dianne Penfound said Wednesday afternoon that police had no further leads or information on the case.

Woman claims she was fired for lack of heels

A Dartmouth single mom is questioning whether her recent firing from a popular Halifax nightclub was over high heels, but her employer says they did everything "in line with labour standards

Ally Robinson, 25, said she's worked in the service industry for years, including at Grafton Connor Group locations like Cheers, and as a bartender at The Dome since October. Last Friday, Robinson said a manager sent her home for not wearing high heels during her shift.

The next day, Robinson said she was dismissed by the same woman who told her she was being let go due to not wearing heels, but then added, according to Robinson, "I don't need to give you a reason at all," because the 25-year-old was still under the probation period.

"It doesn't seem fair," Robinson says.

Robinson said she'd had issues with that particular manager harassing her since she began working at The Dome, and shaming her in front of other employees.

In a video uploaded to You-Tube, Coleman — sitting next children - urges governments on all sides to reach a deal to secure the family's freedom.

Boyle's parents, Patrick and Linda Boyle, said they watched the video on Monday, getting their first glimpse at their young grandsons.

"It is an indescribable emotional sense one has watching a grandson making faces at the camera, while hearing our son's leg chains clanging up and down on the floor," the

The parents say their son told them in a letter that he and his wife have tried to protect their children by pretending their signs of captivity are part of a game being played with guards.

ones, answers after blast

Officials say it's too early to identify cause of explosion

Relatives of workers at a fireworks market flattened by a deadly chain-reaction explosion searched hospitals for loved ones Wednesday as attention focused on apparent lax security that allowed vendors to display their dangerous wares in the passageways between stalls.

Health Secretary Cesar Gomez Monge of Mexico State, where the San Pablito Market is located, said another victim died in a hospital, raising the fatal toll to 32. About 46 people remained hospitalized, five of them in such serious condition that they were fighting for their lives, he added. Ten of the injured were minors including one girl with burns over 90 per cent of her body.

Juana Antolina Hernandez, who has run a stand for 22 years in San Pablito next to one operated by her parents, escaped the market in a mad dash when the explosions began Tuesday afternoon. The following day she was one of the disconsolate residents waiting outside a local morgue.

"I can't find my father, and my mother is very badly burned," said Hernandez, 49. "I am waiting here for them to tell me if my father is here, but up to this point, nothing.

San Pablito was especially well stocked for the holidays and bustling with hundreds of shoppers when the blast reduced the market to a stark expanse of ash, rubble and the scorched metal, casting a pall over the Christmas season. Dramatic video of the explosion showed a towering plume of smoke that was lit up by a staccato of bangs and flashes of light, the third such incident to ravage the market on the northern outskirts of Mexico's capital since 2005.

Officials in Mexico State, which borders Mexico City, said it was too early to identify a cause of the massive series of blasts. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN Officials had monitored truck attack suspect

German officials had deemed the Tunisian man being sought in a manhunt across Europe a threat long before a truck plowed into a Christmas market in Berlin — and even kept him under covert surveillance for six months this year before halting the operation.

Now the international manhunt for Anis Amri - considered the prime suspect in Monday's deadly rampage — is raising questions about how closely German authorities are monitoring the hundreds of known Islamic extremists in the country. The issue puts new pressure on Chancellor Angela Merkel, who is running for re-election next year. Critics are lambasting her for allowing hundreds of thousands of asylum-seekers to enter the country, allegedly without proper security checks.

Aid groups warn of crisis as Mongolia hit by harsh winter

Another unusually harsh winter in Mongolia that's decimating livestock and sending temperatures to minus 56 degrees Celsius (minus 70 Fahrenheit) may create a humanitarian crisis, with worse conditions still to come, aid groups warn.

Save the Children and the International Federation of the Red Cross said Wednesday that this winter will likely see vast swathes of the Mongolian steppe affected by the extreme weather phenomenon known in Mongo-

A dzud typically happens once a decade but could strike for the second consecutive year. The dzud last year killed more than 1 million animals, afflicting the majority of Mongolians who depend on livestock for food, milk and income.

The Mongolian government said last week it met with international organizations including Save the Children, the Red Cross and the United Nations Development Program to discuss efforts to deliver heating, fuel and medical supplies amid "worsening" conditions and heavy snowfall.

Aid groups say the situation is compounded by last year's harsh winter and a deep recession amid a market bust for Mongolia's mineral exports. The country is struggling to repay debt with its hard currency stocks while household savings have also evaporated.

Red Cross disaster program manager in Mongolia Davaajargal Batdorj said more livestock deaths are expected this year with areas of the country already buried under 1 metre of snow. The organization will begin sending cash to herder families in the far west in the coming weeks.

"It's a natural disaster on top of an economic crisis," Davaajargal said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Providers must offer unlimited options, speeds of 50 Mbps

Canada's telecom regulator has declared broadband internet access a basic service across the country, just like current landline telephone service.

But making full access to ultra-high-speed services a reality could cost tens of billions of dollars, and the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission said Wednesday that achieving the goal will take a coordinated effort by it, businesses and governments.

The aim is to ensure service providers (ISPs) offer internet services nationwide at speeds of at least 50 megabits per second for downloading data, and 10 Mbps for uploads, the CRTC said in announcing the new targets. Currently, about 82 per cent of households and businesses receive that level of service. The CRTC wants that increased to 90 per cent by 2021.

ISPs will also be required to offer unlimited data options for fixed broadband services.

"Access to broadband internet service is vital and a basic telecommunication service all Canadians are entitled to receive," said CRTC chairman Jean-Pierre Blais.

As part of the decision, telecom firms will have access to an escalating $750-million industry-sponsored fund over the next five years to invest in broadband infrastructure.

The first $100 million of that will come from a fund that currently subsidizes telephone services in isolated regions. THE CANADIAN PRESS

EMPLOYMENT

Face-to-face crucial for young job seekers

A new report from the federal government's expert panel on youth employment points to a need to move away from digital services for young, first-time job seekers and instead offer more person-to-person contacts and services.

In an interim report released Wednesday, the panel described how young people complete hundreds of online job applications without receiving any response from employers and that the reliance on using personal networks to find jobs is unreasonably high.

Young people success at landing a job do so through the people they know and for those without such a network, the necessity to build connections can be overly intimidating, the report said.

We are deluding ourselves if we think that by digitizing the job application process we are making it more democratic. Network effects are as strong as ever and this hurts young people with less social capital," said panel chairwoman

The panel's interim report found young Canadians have high levels of anxiety about their future work prospects, even those with post-secondary education and previous job experience — two keys frequently cited as an avenue to a good job.

A Statistics Canada study released earlier this month showed that young people have seen their job quality decline over 40 years, even as the youth unemploy-ment rate has remained relatively unchanged. In 2015 it was 2.3 times higher than the rate among those aged 25 and

CHANTAL HÉBERT ON POLITICAL NEWS' DECENTRALIZATION

The days when there was something special or newsworthy about a broadcaster serving up a prime minister to a festive nation have gone.

Once a staple of the holiday news season, the televised prime ministerial fireside chats are well on the way to joining the ghosts of Christmases past.

The CBC and Radio-Canada - among others - have opted out of the format, rightly concluding that the days when there was something special or, for that matter, newsworthy about deferentially serving up a prime minister to a festive nation had gone.

So have the days when a government leader had to rely on a handful of major networks to reach a national audience.

Interviews with the prime minister are a dime a dozen this December. On top of various year-end Parliament Hill interviews and a news conference, Trudeau has spent the past week on a year-end tour.

At the end of last week, he was in Montreal taking questions from Radio-Canada viewers. This week he spent time in Vancouver and Cal-

There was a time when a contingent of Parliament Hill reporters would have tagged along. But trips outside the parliamentary precinct are so few now, as it is possible to catch Trudeau live in action from one's computer at no cost to media organizations.

This year marked the 150th anniversary of the Parliamentary Press Gallery. For its

Over the years, a lot of policy expertise and knowledge has been farmed out of the parliamentary press gallery.

members, it was a bittersweet

In tandem with the larger journalism universe the gallery's membership has been shrinking. That may be even with the narrative at a distance from the capital. The members of the gallery truly were the ears and eyes of Canadians on Parliament Hill for more than a century.

These days, most of the fireworks in Canadian political news comes from reporters and commentators outside Ottawa. THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE truer of the institution's collective influence. The challenging economics of journalism tell only part of the story.

When I came to Parliament Hill in the late '80s, Le Devoir's Montreal-based justice reporter would hop on a bus and travel to Ottawa every time the Supreme Court released a major ruling.

Collecting it in person was the only way to get the text of a decision on the day it was rendered. For that reason, larger news organizations often based their justice reporter on Parliament Hill.

With the exception of the televised House debates, pretty much anything that happened around or on the Hill was only accessible to journalists who were physically present on the premises. It was impossible to keep up

But today, the Globe and Mail's André Picard writes the most authoritative healthpolicy column on offer ... from Montreal.

In English as in French, the bulk of the immigration and foreign-policy commentary and analysis no longer emanates from Parliament Hill

Every year, the budget lockup draws a gaggle of columnists and editorialists who normally toil in Montreal and Toronto. With access to federal finance documents at the tip of anyone's fingers, more fiscal policy coverage than ever is done outside the federal capital. And, of course, it is no longer necessary to have a desk a few blocks down from the Supreme Court to obtain its rulings in real time.

The much-watched At Issue panel on CBC's The National has never had a permanent member whose exclusive workplace was Parliament Hill. (I have been splitting my time between the federal capital and Montreal for 20 years.) And yet parliamentary insiders regularly vote it as the most influential media

Over the years, a lot of policy expertise and knowledge has been farmed out of the press gallery, and, with it, many of the relationships that ministers and mandarins used to nurture with those who were on the beats that pertained to their portfolios.

As a consequence but also as the result of the practice of clickbaiting, the ratio of politics reporting versus public policy coverage coming out of the parliamentary press has steadily increased. The press gallery has become more diverse but polls suggest its output has tended to become less germane to the priorities of voters.

Parliament Hill remains the only place in the country where conflicting political currents come to clash. The dynamics are a must-watch for anyone who wants to understand how complex Canada is. That is not easily done via a computer screen.

It is impossible to imagine national political coverage without a parliamentary component. But regardless of their number, the daily reporting of Parliament Hill media insiders is probably no more likely to be restored to pride of place in the national conversation than the cosy fireside chats of the not-sodistant past.

In the lead-up to the Plunderer-Elect of the United States taking the oath of office, it's become clear that this is the Age of the Thief.

Almost every cabinet appointment seems designed to enrich either the Trumps or their billionaire friends. Trump is draining the swamp but only so he can sell the water back to the thirsty swamp dwellers in gold-embossed bottles.

The next four years will consist of so many bold acts of theft. And not just in the United States.

In Toronto, police are searching for a white male who has robbed five downtown banks in the last month. However, knowing that the public loves a criminal they can cheer for hello, all superheroes — the police have adorably named him the "lunchtime bandit." Such creativity from a force that has only managed to come up with Black Male Known To Police for so many other suspects.

(If I'm ever arrested, please tell the police my moniker is White Woman.)

The robber is brazen but only because he knows that no one suspects clean-cut white men of crimes. He can simply slide a note to a teller saying he's armed and be out of there in minutes.

According to Staff Insp. Mike Earl, this particular perp might not be all bad. 'Maybe he's never been in trouble before," he said.

'Maybe he's an educated individual who's down and out and this is his only hope to get some kind of money."

That is exactly the kind of empathy that we'll need in the coming years. No one is a criminal anymore! Donald Trump isn't a fascist and a kleptocrat. He's just "an educated individual" trying to make a living.

For that reason, Doris Payne is my Pilferer of the Year. Doris is an international jewel thief who has spent over five decades stealing expensive jewelry. And getting away with it. My girl Doris, who is 86, was arrested just last week for stealing a necklace in suburban Atlanta.

While former stockbroker and convicted fraudster Jordan Belfort got an Oscarworthy portrayal by Leonardo DiCaprio, Doris's 50 years of high-stakes thievery has so far only generated rumours of a Halle Berry-attached

(DiCaprio himself seems to like a scammer; he also played conman-turned-FBI consultant Frank Abagnale in 2002's Catch Me If You Can.)

Doris Payne's story is like the Thomas Crowne Affair meets the Best Exotic Marigold Hotel, but starring a fabulous and unrepentant black woman. What does a black woman have to steal to get Viola Desmond to play her?

Wayne Gretzky has scored a literary win by penning the topselling Canadian title of 2016.

BookNet Canada identified the top-selling books over a 48-week period, from Jan. 4 to Dec. 4.

In the fiction category, The Nest by Cynthia D'Aprix

Sweeney took the top spot.

The Couple Next Door by Toronto author Shari Lapena was the highest-ranked Canadian title, in eighth place, one spot ahead of The Illegal by award-winning author Lawrence Hill.

Noah Genner, president and CEO of BookNet Canada, said year-to-date print book sales have been fairly flat compared

The market bumped up for the first time in a few years in 2015 due in part to the colouring book craze, he noted.

"Last year, colouring books were massive ... and they had a huge year and sold really well - especially near Christmas as Christmas gifts. It actually was enough to lift the whole market up," said Genner.

"This year, we're not seeing that same lift from the colouring book. They're still selling well, but not anywhere near where they were selling last year. Last year was a phenomenon.

"Generally, it's been a pretty good year in print book sales, actually, both at the indies and at the chains and online. It's been pretty consistent across all the channels.

Lena Dunham has apologized for saying she wished she had an abortion. Dunham made the comment on last week's episode of her Women of the Hour podcast, while talking about a self-realization.

Bringing back an old-school Legend

You feel their story, you tension, but he

INTERVIEW

Singer's role in La La Land sees him return to musical past

When he was a kid, multiple Grammy winner John Legend was in high school musicals, including You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown and Fiddler on the Roof. So perhaps it was in the cards for him to take on two roles in La La Land, a movie being credited with re-energizing the classic genre.

Written and directed by Damien Chazelle, La La Land opens on Christmas Day.

Legend is both an executive producer on the film and acts and sings onscreen as hit-seeking bandleader Keith. To prepare for the part, Legend worked with an acting coach and learned to play guitar. He also wrote the song he performs with co-star Ryan Gosling, Start a Fire.

Legend's Keith is a longtime friend of jazz musician Sebastian (Gosling), who seems far away from his dream of opening his own club. Keith's band is enjoying success with a far more commercial sound than the purity that Sebastian champions. When Keith offers him a job, it comes at a cost to Sebastian's relationship with struggling actress Mia (Emma Stone) and his vow to stay loyal to his music.

A co-writer on Glory, a Best Original Song Oscar winner from the film Selma, Legend sat down during the Toronto International Film Festival for a Canadian exclusive interview to talk about his work in La La Land.

What job came first: the executive producer or the acting? It was all kind of bundled tion. They wanted me to write a song for (La La Land) and possibly perform in it as an actor ... and come on as an executive producer to help with the music. But (Chazelle) held out the possibility that he might want me to play Keith and I looked at the role and said, 'Yeah, I could do this.' I understand Keith as a character, and it's something I think I (could) do. Damien took a leap of faith because he had never seen me act before. He had to just speculate that I might be good at it and I think he's OK with his decision now.

We don't know much about the friendship between Sebastian and Keith. Did you work out a backstory?

We talked about that with Damien and basically the idea

was that

Keith to be a crappy musician that everyone thought, 'Well, that's terrible.' He wanted it to be a viable option; this is good in its own way. It's different from what Gosling's character's trying to do, but it's still a viable option.

Why do you want to be involved with movies?

I've always loved history and ... a lot of the films that we get involved with and the television shows we get involved with are kind of historically based. And I think film has a power to connect in a really powerful way and a beautiful way, and I love the interaction of film and music, and most of it in things I work on have that interaction where we write songs for it. For instance, Underground, a television show that we produced (for WGN America), we were very involved in the music, so I feel like it's an extension of my music career and my career as a storyteller and as an artist.

Are movie musicals an oldfashioned concept?

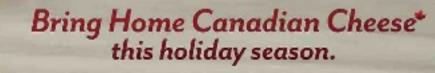

Great stories never go out of style. Great characters never go out of style. Great filmmaking never goes out of style. And I think the power of this film is that you feel a real human connection to Sebastian and Mia, you feel their story, you understand what it's like to have a dream and to want to pursue that. It's really great writing and great dancing, great performances. What's not to like? Even if this genre is supposedly on life support, I think Damien certainly provided enough jolt to it and reinvigorated it for

How does Ryan Gosling hold up as a musician?

Oh, he's so good! He really worked on being a great pianist for this and I was so impressed. And they (Stone and Gosling) sound great together, their singing and their dancing is just magical. It kind of took me by surprise to see how beautifully they were dancing together.

Baking away the grey days of winter

RECIPI

Even the scent of these simple savoury scones will lift mood

Long, grey winter days are the best times to get back into baking.

It's too cold to go out, so you've got time to kill around the house, plus the wonderful smell of warm breads and cakes will put even the biggest hater of winter into a cheerful mood again.

Daphna Rabinovitch's recipe for savoury scones from her book The Baker In Me make for a real breakfast treat.

These delectable scones are so easy to make and the only drawback is that you'll have a hard time resisting the urge to keep them all to yourself.

Once you've got this recipe down, try subbing in different fillings.

Perhaps a rosemary and sundried tomato with pecorino, dill and cheddar, or whatever herbs and vegetables are left over from holiday dinners.

Gruyère, Prosciutto and Chive Scones

Makes 12 scones

Ingredients:

- 2-1/3 cups (580 mL) all-purpose flour
- 1 tbsp (15 mL) granulated sugar
- 1 tbsp (15 mL) baking powder
- 1/2 tsp (2 mL) salt
- 1/2 tsp (2 mL) ground black pepper
- 1/2 cup (125 mL) cold, unsalted butter, cut into cubes
- 3/4 cup (180 mL) cold buttermilk
- 1 cold large egg
- 3/4 cup (180 mL) shredded Gruyère
- 1/2 cup (125 mL) chopped prosciutto or cooked bacon
- 1/4 cup (60 mL) chopped chives

These savoury scones make for a delectable breakfast treat. KARON LIU/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Directions

1. Preheat oven to 400 F (200 C). Line a baking sheet with parchment paper or a silicone baking mat.

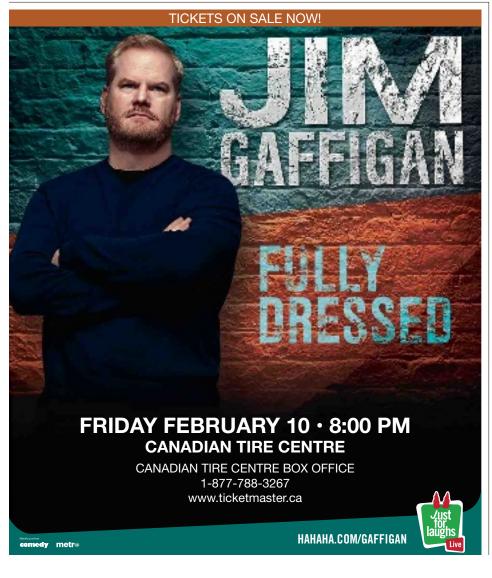

2. Combine flour, sugar, baking powder, salt and black pepper in a food processor fitted with blade attachment to combine ingredients.

3. Add butter and pulse until butter is cut into small pea-sized chunks. (Alternatively, use a large bowl to mix everything and use a pastry cutter or two knives to cut butter into pea-sized chunks.) Transfer mixture to a large bowl.

- 4. In a small bowl, whisk together buttermilk and egg. Pour over flour mixture along with cheese, prosciutto and chives. Toss with a fork until mixture is thoroughly moistened. Some flour may not be fully incorporated, that's OK.
- 5. Transfer dough to a clean work surface and knead gently until dough just forms a moist, cohesive ball. Pat dough down to a rectangle that is 8-by-5 inches (20-by-12 cm) long and 1-inch (2.5 cm) high.
- 6. With a knife or pastry cutter, cut rectangle in half lengthwise. Cut each half into 6 triangles. Transfer scones to lined baking sheet.
- 7. Bake in centre of oven for 16 to 18 minutes, until scones are golden and baked through. Cool scones on a wire rack for at least 5 minutes before serving.

Canapes save on holiday hassle

When it comes to planning party menus, we often think the most special dishes are the most complicated ones, with exotic and expensive ingredients. But often, it's the classic recipes that rely on familiar flavours that your guests will remember.

Food trends are cyclical, and right now, to the benefit of party hosts and chefs, diners are craving unfussy recipes that rely on the quality of its ingredients. This party classic for prosciutto and melon canapes are a quick-andeasy small bite that will shine on your holiday table.

A canape is a small, one-ortwo bite hors d'oeuvre, usually consisting of a piece of bread or cracker topped with, well, anything. They are great for parties, since they are not too filling and easy to eat when one hand is occupied by a glass of champagne. And for the host, they are a breeze to make during the busy holiday season.

You can make toppings ahead of time, like chutneys or caramelized onions, or even rely on prepared ingredients with great flavour combinations. Brie and fig jam on crackers, for example, needs no preparation.

can be found year-round, and their brightness reminds us that there is some warm sunshine following the cold winter.

A slice of prosciutto adds a savory twist and a satisfying texture. We like to spread our soft white bread canape base with a little bit of mascarpone cheese before topping it, but you could even use a soft goat cheese or an herbed spreadable fresh cheese.

This canape relies on flavour from the melon. Look for melons with no stem attached, since that means it was picked mature.

Prosciutto and Melon Canape

Servings information.

Ingredients:

- 8 very thin slices prosciutto (about 5 ounces)
- 30 (1 1/2-inch-diamater) round white bread canape bases, toasted

- 5 ounces mascarpone cheese, or as needed
- 30 pieces cantaloupe, cut into medium dice, or scooped into 1/2-inch balls
- 30 mint leaves

Directions:

1. Fold the prosciutto to fit the canape bases.

- 2. To assemble the canapes, spread the canape with some of the mascarpone cheese and top with a piece of prosciutto.
- 3. Pipe a small mound of mascarpone in the centre of each canape and top with cut melon. Top each canape with a mint leaf.

LIQUID ASSETS PETER ROCKWELL

Three perfect partners for the big bird

What wine goes with turkey? When you write about booze, you hear that question more than White Christmas at seasonal get-togethers. Truth be told, the big bird is pretty accommodating when it comes to a liquid partner. The ideal match is actually less about the meat and more about the side dishes which, on December 25th, can be anything from herbaceous and earthy to sweet and tangy. Here are three perfect, all-purpose pairings.

Moselland 2014 Ars Vitis Riesling ($11.95-$15.99): One for those who like a hint of sweetness. Easy-drinking, and in-law friendly, with its cool window label design this German drinks as good as it looks.

Lindemans 2014 Bin 65 Chardonnay ($10.95-

$12.99): Dry and lightly oaked, it's a Down Under white layered with bright tropical fruit and balanced acidity. Kim Crawford 2015 South Island Pinot Noir ($19.95-

Weaving a basket of festive delights

Adding cream cheese to your cookie dough helps to keep your Christmas cookies softer and lighter in texture with a tangier flavour too. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Nutty cookies forgiving for those without nimble fingers

Chocolatey and nutty with a fairly light texture thanks to the cream cheese, this recipe is adapted from this year's Better Homes and Gardens' Christmas Cookies issue.

They were originally pinwheel shapes but the basket shape that comes from folding all the cookie flaps is also lovely. This shape is also more forgiving for those who don't have nimble fingers.

Cookie tip: Experiment with cream cheese in cookie dough by replacing 1/4 cup of the butter with the same amount of full fat cream cheese to get a softer, lighter texture with a soft tanginess.

The minute you walk into Smudge Beauty Bar, you know you've stumbled upon the sweetest little oasis in town. Located in a two-storey loft that has a relaxed neighbourhood vibe, it's the perfect place to unwind and be pampered after some weekend shopping. We caught up with owners Inaas Kiryakos and Mark Mignault to find out about their inspiration for opening the beauty boutique.

What made you decide to offer express beauty services? "We wanted to open a shop where people could come chill out, be themselves and have great services done at a fair price. We avoided a 'tranquil' or classic spa experience—we're a bit different."

How has North Dal changed since you opened? "North Dal has always been a great little borough, but with so much bar and restaurant influx into the ByWard Market, Dalhousie Street is quickly becoming a preferred boutique destination."

You carry a variety of Canadian apothecary goods. Why is that important? "Not to sound cliché, but we're local. Canadians are doing some amazing things."

What are the hottest nail colours for this winter? "Deep shimmery plums, dark starry navy, velvety and muddy browns and of course (as always) nudes." -Katie Hession

Responding to the fentanyl crisis

Paramedics try to deal with growing opioid overdoses

JEN TRAPLIN

As health care professionals and policy makers struggle to get a handle on the fentanyl crisis, frontline workers now have to consider its even more frightening — and deadly — cousin,

The synthetic opiate is typically used as a tranquilizer for large animals, like elephants. It's recent confirmed presence on Ontario streets not only poses an increased danger to illicit drug users, but first responders as well.

"Some of these drugs come in powder form, which can lead the powder to become airborne, so, when we respond to scenes, paramedics may accidentally inhale a deadly dose of fentanyl or carfentanil," says Ottawa Paramedic Service spokesperson J.P.

Last week, the service sent out reminders to Ottawa paramedics, warning of the extreme dangers of fentanyl and carfentanil and urging them to wear N95 masks for their protection, the same masks first responders wore during the SARS outbreak over a decade ago.

That will likely be the protocol for some time as opioid overdoses in the city continue to rise. Evidence of that is clear in the number of times paramedics have had to administer naloxone, a potentially life-saving medication used to block the effects of opioids, while treating patients.

In 2014, Ottawa paramedics used naloxone 53 times. In 2015, that number climbed to 61. And, in just the first six months of 2016, Ottawa paramedics used naloxone 56 times.

"We anticipate that, this year, our use of naloxone will double over last year. This trend of naloxone use has not stopped and the pace may well have been increasing in the last six months of this year," Trottier says.

"Now we have carfentanil to deal with, which is 100 times more powerful than regular fentanyl, four thousand times more potent than heroin and ten thousand times more potent than morphine. These drugs are extremely powerful and users can get addicted very easily so this is a problem now and one that will only get worse before it gets better."

While Trottier applauds a provincial initiative to provide free, take-home naloxone kits (and training) at pharmacies across Ontario, he stresses it is still vital that paramedics respond in the case of an opioid overdose.

"Even after administering naloxone, friends of family members should still call 911 as the powerful drug and the amount taken is unknown. A dose of naloxone may be just a temporary cure for the overdose."

Users push to have voices heard

As the conversation among politicians, police and health professionals continues nationally on how best to address the growing opioid crisis in Canada, advocates for drug users are pushing to have their voices heard.

There's a statement that we use in drug user advocacy and that's 'nothing for us, without us.' We think that when we have professionals along with the people with lived experiences, real change can happen — they're the real experts," says Sean LeBlanc, founder of Ottawa's Drug User Advocacy League (DUAL), an independent, not-for-profit group of current and former drug consumers and their allies.

"It's just like having a bunch of old, white men deciding women's reproductive rights. We just want a basic say in things that are affecting us and I think we deserve that."

While LeBlanc says he's not happy with what he believes was a lack of inclusion of drug users at the recent opioid conference in Ottawa, he is pleased with legislative changes stemming from that discussion, particularly the proposed new measures that would make it easier to open more supervised injection sites, something advocates have been calling for in the Nation's Capital for years.

The issue is one both Mayor Jim Watson and Ottawa Police Chief Charles Bordeleau have long been opposed to. LeBlanc is hoping that will now change.

"Mr. Watson always says that we need more forms of treatment, and I agree with him there, but people need to be alive and relatively healthy in order to access that treatment and this is where supervised injection sites really catch the most marginalized people of our society," he explains.

"It's not a pretty thing but it's something that we need and I think it's just part of the continuum of care." JEN TRAPLIN

DUAL hosts twice-weekly open drop ins for current or former Ottawa-area drug users and their allies.

The drop-ins take place Tuesdays from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at 380 Murray Street and Fridays from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at 216 Murray Street (next to Shepherds of Good Hope).

Provinces combat the crisis

While fentanyl and other opioid use is on the rise across the country, the problem is most prevalent in British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario. Here is what each province is doing in an effort to combat the crisis.

ONTARIO

Opioid overdose deaths (2015*): 543 total,165 attributed to fentanyl

In October, Ontario Health Minister Eric Hoskins announced that opioid use has become the third leading cause of accidental death in the province, killing more Ontarians annually than car accidents. In response to the growing crisis, the minister announced the creation of a comprehensive opioid strategy, which includes the appointment of Ontario's first ever overdose coordinator, Dr. David Williams, the province's chief medical officer of health.

The strategy will see more time and money spent on research, education, expanding access to free naloxone (used to treat opioid overdose) and increasing access to addiction treat ment. New legislation also requires patients who receive prescription fentanyl to return their used patches to the pharmacy before they can get new ones.

Police forces are also exploring ways to combat the opioid problem. For example, the Peterborough Police Service announced, by the end of the year, all of its officers will carry naloxone while on duty, a first in the province.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

Opioid overdose deaths (2016): 755 total, 374 attributed to fentanyl

On Monday, the BC Coroners Service released a frightening update on the opioid crisis in the province, reporting 128 deaths due to illicit drug use in the month of November alone.

According to the British Columbia government, more than $43 million has gone toward supporting measures to bolster the province's response to the crisis, including deploying mobile medical units in high-risk areas, providing free take-home naloxone kits and investing in research, education and

Opioid overdose deaths (January to September 2016): 338 total, 193 attributed to fentanyl

Similar to Ontario and BC, the province of Alberta has launched a number of initiatives to combat the growing number of opioid-related overdoses in the province.

Alberta's designated 'provincial response to opioid crisis" includes working closely with health experts, community organizations, advocates and law enforcement to expand access to opioid replacement therapy, provide free take-home naloxone kits and assessing the need for supervised consumption services.

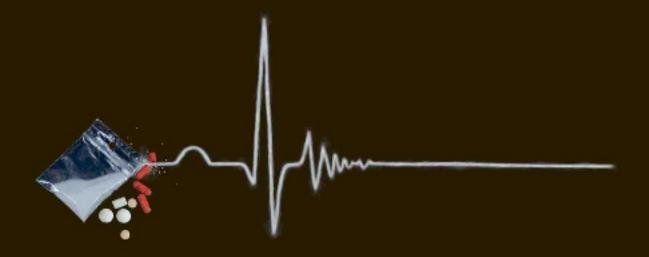

Legislation will also come into effect in January to regulate pill presses used to manufacture illicit fentanyl.

Fentanyl may only be the lethal tip of the iceberg

Fentanyl is getting awareness because it tragically kills in microgram doses. But some experts believe that discussing fentanyl is only the lethal tip of the iceberg.

Kent MacLeod, clinical pharmacist at Ottawa's NutriChem Compounding Pharmacy and Clinic, says that there's much more to the fentanyl story.

"You may more readily see people who accidentally overdose because it kills in such small amounts, but users didn't get started with fentanyl. We don't have a fentanyl problem: we have a narcotics problem, an opioid problem."

Per capita, Canada is the #2 consumer of opioids in the world, with the United States occupying the top spot. In both countries, most people seeking opioids on the streets started from the legal, prescription pathway.

MacLeod quotes a 2014 study by Cicero et. al. which found shocking differences between todays' heroin users and those of the past. Researchers found that of people entering treatment for heroin addiction who had begun abusing opioids in the 1960s, more than 80 percent had started with heroin. But of those who began abusing opioids in the 2000s, 75 percent reported that their first opioid was actually a prescription drug.

"Our culture has allowed opioids to be prescribed indiscriminately, even for conditions they're not indicated for like fibromyalgia" says MacLeod. "We might not be able to stop all deaths from fentanyl laced with other drugs, but you can certainly reduce the number of users being prescribed opioids in the first place."

MacLeod is involved with de-prescribing, where clinicians aim to either reduce a patient's doses or stop certain medications altogether. Good candidates for de-prescribing are people taking medications that cause them harm, that are no longer providing benefit, or that may be considered inappropriate for them.

When they come to MacLeod, his clients are often taking a dozen or more prescription drugs, sometimes including narcotics, and often self-medicate using alcohol and other substances.

"The chemistry of an addicted brain is proven to be different than a non-addicted brain," says MacLeod. "Addiction and cravings are a science-based problem, not a moral failing. People should see an expert in chemistry to help with the root of their addictions."

Make it a time-capsule holiday theme

Glen Peloso

For Torstar News Service

Holiday decor and accessories enjoy greater longevity when carried out with a plan. Avoiding the Christmas-exploded-in-here look is key, and decorating with a theme in a streamlined way is a straight-forward approach to achieving that. So how about the retro-inspired, vintage-vibe theme this season? Here are a few ways to do it:

Tree lights and ornaments

The focal point of most people's home decor is the Christmas tree. Original vintage bulbs came with metallic reflectors to disperse light and add a little

Fast forward 60 years and the industry has come a long way with more safe and energy-efficient options, many of which are available this season with that hipster retro look at retailers such as Lowe's and Canadian Tire. Layer in light with strands of twinkle lights for depth and consider adding a collection of original or reproduction glass vintage ornaments, which can be found now at almost all retailers in the Christmas spirit.

Wrap it up

To keep with the theme, add mid-century detail to the wrapped gifts under your retro tree for a creatively cohesive look this season. I personally love this look from HomeSense, with the wonderful wrap, ribbon and tags that bring to life a sense of being revived from a time capsule.

Wrapped gifts make for great decor throughout the holidays.

Accessories

Part of the joy of season is the delight in finding and using beautiful elements of holiday decor.

Traditional choices, such as evergreen boughs, mistletoe, poinsettia and seasonally scented candles are always favourites. Adding playful and practical elements, such as a vintage radiosnow globe — spied at The Bay recently - or a vintage record player,

Top kitchen trends for 2017

Black and white, mix and match will blow up

Americans briefly scaled back the scope of home renovation projects after the recession began nearly a decade ago, says interior designer and HGTV Design Star judge Vern Yip. But even during the peak of that focus on smaller, more sustainable living, the size and complexity of kitchen designs continued to grow.

The kitchen is the heart of the home," Yip says, and people see it as a good place to spend money and recoup the investment when they sell their home.

What's trending in kitchen design as 2017 approaches? We've asked Yip and two other interior design experts — Caleb Anderson, co-founder of the New York-based design firm Drake/Anderson, and Brian Patrick Flynn, interior designer for HGTV's Urban Oasis 2016 home giveaway — to share their favourite innovations and thoughts on which trending design choices will stand the

Think black and white

Black and white are the trendiest colours now for kitchen design, and Flynn points out that they're also timeless.

A black and white palette works with virtually any accent colour, he says, so "if you go black and white, you really only have to spend once."

Right now, "black appliances with more of a matte finish" are among Flynn's favourites.

Yip says cabinets in both black and white are popular, and look great mixed together.

That's another trend all three designers are seeing: upper and lower cabinets done in different finishes and materials. Anderson recently designed a kitchen in London that has upper cabinets made of metal and glass, with lower cabinets made of cerused wood. "They need to complement each other," he says, "but everything doesn't have to match.

Get creative

Anderson also notes that it's popular to design a kitchen island out of different materials than the cabinets and countertops. That puts a personal stamp on the room, especially if you make your island out of a distinctive piece of furniture, like a vintage cabinet.

By using popular materials in unique ways, you can design a kitchen that feels current but won't look dated as trends change. Flynn is fan of that approach: For HGTV's Urban Oasis giveaway house this year, he chose a reflective, black marble mosaic tile for the kitchen walls, from the counter all the way up to the ceiling. The look is on-trend, but has a classic beauty that won't need renovating in a few years.

The hardware in your kitchen is sort of like the jewelry.

He also used concrete for the countertops, a popular option now but one with a classic simplicity. Along with concrete, Anderson and Yip says quartz countertops are popular.

Quartz is more durable than marble, which can easily stain, and more consistent in colour throughout a large slab.

Textured and coloured glass is another way to jump on a trend in ways that reflect your own style, Anderson says. He's seeing glass used to surround the hoods above stoves, for backsplashes, and as cabinet

Mix your metals

Gold, brass and other yellowtoned metal finishes have been popular for several years, says Yip, and now white metal finishes like chrome, pewter and stainless steel are catching on

Anderson recently used a mix of black and steel finishes in one kitchen, along with

All three designers suggest going with your favourites and feeling free to mix and match.

"The hardware in your kitchen is sort of like the jewelry," and you can have fun adding that bit of bling, Yip says. Changing your hardware is a nice way to update the kitchen without having to change the

You can also bring in a light fixture with a metal that's different from your cabinet hardware. Yip is seeing many clients opting to splurge on dramatic lighting in the kitchen, rather than in the dining room.

"The old way of thinking is you spend thousands of dollars on the crystal chandelier over the dining table, but lighting over the kitchen was practical, he says. Now, there's more emphasis on kitchen lighting "that doesn't feel functional but has a really polished esthetic quality."

Tech isn't an afterthought

Flynn used a WiFi-enabled oven (easily controlled from a smartphone) in the Urban Oasis house, as well as a refrigerator equipped with cameras accessible from a digital app, so you can see what you have inside it.

"While you are out, you can decide on the fly what to buy and bring home to be stocked up for dinner," he says.

Smaller appliances are a priority for many homeowners. "People tend to clutter their countertops with small appliances or put them in the cabinet and have to pull them out," Anderson says. So designers now routinely figure in storage space where small appliances can be concealed but easily accessed.

Also, says Anderson, "Clients have so many devices, smart devices," that they need "an area in the kitchen that's devoted to USB ports and chargers.' THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
